

Violence against women

The abuse occurs in all social classes. Unfortunately, women from all countries and religions suffer...

It has long been thought that women who were victims of violence were women of a certain age, confined at home... until the percentage started to increase. The profile of the attackers has now changed: They are abusive men anywhere and from all social status.

Personally, I think we should pay attention to many of these important pieces of news rather than to football news for example. We should be more empathetic, so we should pay more attention to the thousands of women who are daily victims of gender violence. What I want to say with this is that the calendar is full of international rights or days to denounce injustices. However, I'm sure most people will be much more concerned about the calendar of the "football League" season. The commitment that the whole society should take would be to prevent and combat this problem.

In a few words, violence against women is perhaps the most shameful human rights violation because it does not know geographical, cultural or wealth limits. If it continues we won't be able to claim that we are having real progress towards equality, development and peace.
